On September 12, 2011, 3 ½ year old Brody Burton was diagnosed with Acute Lymphoblastic Leukemia (A.L.L.). What started out as a limp turned out to be a parent's worst nightmare. Brody was rushed to UMass Hospital Worcester where he received his first blood transfusion. Brody was carrying half of the amount of blood cells he needed to survive. Doctors performed a bone marrow aspiration to confirm Brody's diagnosis was A.L.L.

His parents decided to entrust their son's care with Boston Children's Hospital for aggressive chemotherapy which he will receive until the fall of 2013. This special event will help address the extreme financial burden as the family must be available full time to care for Brody and travel to Boston for his many treatments.

Although they hate the road ahead, they know that it's a means to an end. A cancer free Brody!!! Brody has become an inspiration to everyone.

He is a courageous little boy with a zest for life. He hopes this fall he will be able to attend school just like his friends.
